FRANCES W. PRITCHETT

A Date List for Urdu Literature —A Work in Progress

THIS PROJECT BEGAN several years ago as a small list that I had begun to keep in my computer to compensate for my poor memory for dates. When Shamsur Rahman Faruqī found out about my list, he proceeded to increase its scope and value many times over. In the process, he has introduced me to helpful works like Mālik Rām’s Tazkīra-e Māb-o-Sāl (Delhi: Maktaba-e Jāmi‘a, 1992), and exposed me to more Urdu literary personages—and more Urdu proper names—than I ever knew existed. The technical work of typing and compiling has been mine. The creative work of ascertaining dates, adding names, verifying dates, deciding on the form of names, has been almost entirely his.

Two caveats are in order. First, although the majority of the names are arranged by takhalluṣ, some are not. We have tried to refer to people as they are most commonly known in Urdu literary discourse. Anyone who has dealt at all with Indo-Muslim names knows that perfect coherence and consistency in treatment is impossible. All choices of the operative name to use for alphabetization have been made by Shamsur Rahman Faruqī. Occasional special choices imposed by diacritical consistency—e.g., “Iḥtishām” with an “I” instead of the common “E”—have been made by me. As yet, we have done almost no cross-referencing; this is still a work in progress.

The other obvious caveat is that of course many of the dates are somewhat disputed, others quite uncertain, and still others entirely unknown. Some names appear as mere place-holders, with (as yet) no dates at all. We hope to continue our work on this list. It would be a great help to have additions and corrections from readers of The Annual. No such list can be perfect, and we are very aware that ours is not; but it at least provides a starting point.

—Frances W. Pritchett

WE HAVE SET June 1995 as the cutoff date for ceasing to add new material or corrections. This may sound somewhat arbitrary, but there can be no natural end to a project of this type; one can hope that the work, in book form, will go through two or three editions before becoming entirely out of date, and each edition would hopefully be an improvement on the previous one. The process of correction will of course go on until the last possible moment before the final print run. This list couldn't have come into being without reference books—critical editions of tazkiras, biographical dictionaries, histories of Urdu literature, both specialized and general, biographies of individuals, papers discussing details or problems relating to specific dates or events, biographical material contained in anthologies, critical editions of dīvāns or kulliyāts of the older authors, autobiographies, letters; in short, I have used all kinds of materials that could be helpful for such an undertaking. My debts are too numerous to record, in fact even to remember. I say a sincere but silent “Thank you” to all.

I know that if I had a scholarly bent of mind, I would have on record full details of my sources. Since I have not done so, I must not only apologize for my inability to cite chapter and verse from my sources, but also take full responsibility for the errors in this list.

The difficulties in this task have been numerous. Urdu dates are notoriously hard to fix. While there is genuine doubt and dispute about such matters as, say, the dates of Vali's birth and death, or of Saudā's final departure from Delhi, and one therefore trusts to one's luck in choosing whichever date one does choose, the real aggravation lies elsewhere. For example, many dates are available in the hijrī calendar alone, and, almost invariably, the C.E. date corresponding to a hijrī year spans two years: Mir died in 1225 A.H.; this corresponds to 1810–1811 C.E. Very often the actual month of the hijrī year in which an event occurred is not known; it is therefore not possible to determine the exact C.E. year in which the event occurred. My strategy has been to give the exact C.E. year, if determinable; if I have only a hijrī year and the C.E. year is not exactly determinable, I give the approximate C.E. year. (If a hijrī year began in January or February, I take the counterpart C.E. year to correspond to that hijrī year itself; if the hijrī year ends in November or December, I take the counterpart C.E. year to be the one following the hijrī year.)

Very often there are different dates for the same event; or the hijrī and the C.E. dates may both have been given, but the one may not correspond to the other. In all such cases I have accepted the date I thought most reliable. Where I was unable to determine a reliable C.E. date for a particular event, I give both the C.E. years corresponding to the hijrī year in which that event occurred. In many cases I have just said “flourished during such and such years.” The reasons for this are obvious.

I would like to emphasize that the present work is just a date list. It is not a dictionary of biography. No doubt its value would have been greater if it were not so much like the skeleton of a biographical dictionary. We would have loved to log into it more details (dates of important works, long-term employment, cities of domicile, marriages), and thus flesh out the list a bit. But this kind of information is even harder to find—much less determine accurately—than dates of birth and death. The present work is therefore a compendium of the minimum information that one would like to have about an Urdu author. God knows, even this information is hard to find in a hurry in one place. (For instance, just how many of us can, without a lot of difficulty, give to a casual inquirer the dates of, say, Kanhaiyā Lāl Kapūr or Ghausī Bijāpūrī?)

Lastly, there’s the question of who should be put into, and who kept out of, such a list. I fear that no such list can be entirely satisfactory, given our state of knowledge and our emotional and intellectual prejudices. Our literary canon stubbornly refuses to give its due place to much of the literature of the past, particularly the literature produced in Gujarat, the Deccan, Bihar, and other places far away from the so-called literary capitals of Delhi and Lucknow. Consequently, many of us continue to remain ignorant of even the major names from these areas. This list may therefore seem to be full of unfamiliar names. Conversely, some readers may indignantly complain that some of their “favorites” are missing. All that I can say to them is that one of the purposes of publishing this list at this stage and in this form is to elicit new information, and corrections.
